AIMS AND SCOPE: The Nature Clinical Practice journals deliver timely, authoritative interpretations of key research developments, translating the latest findings into clinical practice. Content includes editorial and opinion pieces, highlights from the current literature, Practice Point commentaries on the application of recent research to patient care, thorough reviews, and in-depth case studies. Content is subject to rigorous peer review and is editorially independent. Authors are asked to state any professional or financial situations that may be perceived as causing a conflict of interest with respect to integrity of content. We welcome suggestions and ideas for articles, but discourage the submission of non-commissioned manuscripts. For more information on submitting a suggestion, please see the website.
