His research is in a range of areas including national epidemiology such as the National Diet and Nutrition survey of the elderly, the 1998 Adult Dental Health Survey and the 2003 Children's Dental Health Survey.

His health services research includes projects in endodontics, resin bonded bridgework and the development of quality of life related outcome measures. He also has a developing interest in research into primary dental care.

Dr Steele studied dentistry in Dundee. He was appointed as lecturer in restorative dentistry in Newcastle in 1989, predominantly working in the conservation department.

Practice enjoys new success

A group of three dental practices in Solihull and Water Orton have been recognised as an Investor in People. Griffin, Griffin & Associates owned by Dr's Tony and Julia Griffin received the award earlier this year and claim that it has raised awareness among the staff to specific training and development opportunities available to each member.

New oral health strategy launched

Sunderland Teaching Primary Care Trust recently launched its new Oral Health Strategy, which plans to address dental problems in Sunderland through improved oral health promotion, increasing the number of Sunderland residents registered at dentists and recruiting more dental specialists.

Deputy Chief Dental Officer Barry Cockroft (pictured) plans to take the strategy to other areas across the country as a model of good practice.

In some areas in Sunderland there are significantly higher levels of dental caries and other oral health problems in comparison to regional and national statistics. The number of decayed, missing or filled teeth in some areas of the city has been measured at over twice the national average.

Dental caries and poor oral health in adolescents and adults also stand at high levels. For more information email joanne.walker@suntpt.nhs.uk.

Delegates raise surgery funds

A series of generous donations by delegates at the BDTA Showcase raised enough funds to send a Dentaaid surgery to Chad, one of the world's poorest countries.

A draw at the event, sponsored by the Dentists' Provident Society, together with donations from dental companies provided the £3,000 needed to send equipment to a clinic in the Koumra region of Chad.

The prize draw was for a weekend for two in Paris and was won by Dr Shabir Pandor, a dentist from London.

Dr Eloi, the dentist in Chad, has until now been using a treadle powered drill and very basic equipment to serve a population of three million people. The surgery funded by the Showcase delegates will revolutionise dental care in the area, according to the dental charity.

Chad, a large landlocked country in central Africa is one of the world's poorest nations where many have a life expectancy of only 48 years.

With the north of the country in the Sahara desert and the south so wet that the roads are often impassable, it has only 16 dentists in the country, a ratio of 1:500,000.

Two thirds of the 8 million population depend on subsistence agriculture for a living and it has the least industry in equatorial Africa.
