

IMAGE

Insights image for “Circulating extracellular vesicles from patients with acute chest syndrome disrupt adherens junctions between endothelial cells”

Gabrielle Lapping-Carr¹, Joanna Gemel¹, Yifan Mao¹, Gianna Sparks¹, Margaret Harrington¹, Radhika Peddinti¹ and Eric C. Beyer¹

Pediatric Research (2021) 89:1036; <https://doi.org/10.1038/s41390-020-01288-3>

Subjects with sickle cell disease produce small EVs that cause damage to endothelial cells in vitro compared to small EVs from subjects without sickle cell disease.¹ The damage elicited in endothelial cells is more severe when the EVs are isolated from subjects with sickle cell disease during an episode of ACS.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This study was supported by NIH UL1 TR000430, Comer Hospital RBC Race Funds, Ted Mullin Fund.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

Competing interests: The authors declare no competing interests.

Publisher's note Springer Nature remains neutral with regard to jurisdictional claims in published maps and institutional affiliations.

REFERENCE

- Lapping-Carr, G. et al. Circulating extracellular vesicles from patients with acute chest syndrome disrupt adherens junctions between endothelial cells. Pediatr. Res. <https://doi.org/10.1038/s41390-020-0923-5> (2020).

¹Department of Pediatrics, University of Chicago, Chicago, IL, USA
Correspondence: Gabrielle Lapping-Carr (glappingcarr@peds.bsd.uchicago.edu)
These authors contributed equally: Gabrielle Lapping-Carr, Joanna Gemel.

Received: 4 November 2020 Accepted: 4 November 2020
Published online: 31 March 2021