Becoming a fully rounded professional

When this article was initially published the below section of text should have been credited to Wikijobs:

'Soft skills are sometimes referred to as transferable skills or professional skills. As this term implies, these are skills that are less specialised, less rooted in specific vocations, and more aligned with the general disposition and personality of a candidate. Examples of important soft skills are communication, teamwork and problem solving.'

Soft skills relate to your attitudes and your intuitions. As soft skills are less referable to your qualifications and more personality-driven, it is important to consider what your soft skills are and how you might show evidence of them before you apply for a job. This is particularly true of the recruitment process for graduate programmes, where transferable skills and potential often take precedence over professional experience.

Being able to demonstrate your soft skills equates to demonstrating great potential to succeed and progress in the career of your choice.'

LETTER

Dear Editor,

I find it very unfair, the low wage that dental nurses are on. We are now expected to take on extra responsibilities as in line with the new acorn check ups, with absolutely no mention of pay increases! Where is the incentive to take on extra work?

I have been a nurse for 28 years, at least the past 12 years I have been on the same wage except for a 25p increase 5 years ago! 12 years ago £9 an hour wasn't bad money, now it's barely above minimum wage.

If improvements are to be made in oral health as intended, then dental nurses should be awarded a decent wage!

C Evans
