

DOI: 10.1038/srep01424

SUBJECT AREAS:

INNER PLANETS

ENVIRONMENTAL SCIENCES

CLIMATE SCIENCES

PLANETARY SCIENCE

SCIENTIFIC REPORTS:

1 : 1166

DOI: 10.1038/srep01166
(2013)

Published:

30 January 2013

Updated:

6 March 2013

CORRIGENDUM: Don Juan Pond, Antarctica: Near-surface $\text{CaCl}_2$ -brine feeding Earth's most saline lake and implications for Mars

James L. Dickson, James W. Head, Joseph S. Levy & David R. Marchant

The authors have noticed that in the original version of this Article, part of the Acknowledgements section was omitted. The additional acknowledgements appear below.

This work was funded by the National Science Foundation Antarctic Science Division (Office of Polar Programs) through grants to James W. Head (ANT-0739702) and David R. Marchant (ANT-0944702), which are gratefully acknowledged. Logistical support for this project in Antarctica was provided by the U.S. National Science Foundation through the U.S. Antarctic Program.